They were back.
All of them.
And classes.
So basically the end of winter break was the worst thing ever.
On the plus side, Qibli and Winter were surprisingly useful after getting over being slightly miffed at Newt for getting so close to Carnelian and Kinkajou. They threw out their own lots- Qibli was focused intensely on his theory, while the others all drifted awkwardly.
Carnelian, however, felt the others were overlooking one very important occurence: Flying lessons.
The first years had all been alerted that they would be beginning the next day, and a buzz had filled the Hufflepuff, Slytherin, and Gryffindor common rooms that was noticeably missing from Winter, Newt, and- shockingly- Kinkajou.
"I mean, it'll probably be fun," shrugged Kinkajou, "But Quidditch just isn't my thing."
Winter frowned. "Never been on a broom in my life."

All Newt had to say was a meek 'Meh'.
This infuriated Carnelian, and she found a twin spirit in Qibli, who was also similarly furious.
"What do you MEAN 'Meh'? You learn to FLY. IN THE AIR."
Qibli threw up his hands, "YOU'RE A MUGGLE-BORN! YOU SHOULD BE THE ONE MOST EXCITED!"
Newt shrugged. "It just doesn't seem important related to other things."
Carnelian wondered if the fact that the flying lessons would be shared by Slytherin and Gryffindor was a good thing if she was going to have to watch Newt and Winter.

Madame Bromeliad strode before them, looking annoyed- though according to some of the older Gryffindors, she always did.
"Hold out your hands." she snapped. "And say- 'Up'."
Instantly the class bowed to her will, to disastrous results all around. Winter's launched itself up- but missed his hand and went soaring up into the clouds. He frowned, squinting into the sky. "Well there goes that."
Qibli's went to his hand, and he looked perfectly at ease, as did Carnelian's. Newt's promptly hit her in the face.
Bromeliad looked in shock. "Last class Turtle's began to hit everyone else's and Pronghorn's went down into the ground. And that was still better than this."
At that moment a broom burst into flames and Winter's was spotted diving in and out of the clouds high above.
After several Accios and a few other spells to get everything sorted out, she ordered them to try again. This time, Newt's hit her in the face again, and instead of jumping into the sky Winter's also hit Newt.
He sighed. "This is worse than winter break."
Carnelian laughed. "What kind of winter break did you have?"
He gave an awkward chuckle. "Hey, is Mango's broom lifting her?"
Carnelian blinked, turning her head. Indeed, Mango's broom had begun to lift her into the air and an exasperated Bromeliad gave up and gave them the rest of the period off.
Back in the castle, Carnelian waved goodbye to the others, beginning to head up to the Gryffindor common room, then deciding to take a brief detour to check in on Kinkajou, as Turtle's broom had missed her broom and hit her instead. She walked down the corridor, alone, vaguely thinking about the time.
It was unexpected.
But there was a glimpse of red, and then everything was gone.

Carnelian was missing.
The teachers didn't know where she was.
No one could find her- alerts had been sent through all the paintings. So far there had been nothing.
"Don't worry," said Qibli, shakily trying to reassure Winter, "She's Carnelian. I'm sure she's just off on an adventure."
Five people- Qibli, Winter, Kinkajou, Newt, and Moon Watcher were in the Ravenclaw common room after Moon had yelled at the knocker for giving them a riddle at such a time.
Moon and Newt were brainstorming, pacing in the corner, shooting ideas at each other.
"It's an intricate plan," said Newt, "To get our attention."
"She went in the Chamber of Secrets. It's not open, but she got in and that's where whatever it is attacked her." Moon countered.
Winter and Qibli were sitting in armchairs next to each other. Winter was muttering something about the weather- even though it was clear, not hailing- and Qibli was trying to help him.
"Storm," moaned Winter, head in his hands.
"No, it's a fine night- can someone close the curtains?" Qibli rushed, worried.
Kinkajou had her head in her hands, sitting in a chair in the corner. It was like the island again. For the first time she didn't feel safe at Hogwarts anymore. If Carnelian had been attacked, anyone could be attacked.
Except Carnelian hadn't been attacked randomly.
She'd been targeted.
And Kinkajou knew why.
"Whoever it is- maybe they took her to make a statement? Like, 'do something'." Moon asked nervously.
"Then why didn't they take you or Winter? It can't be that- so what is it?" Newt frowned.
"Maybe she saw something she shouldn't have?"
"They just took the opportunity when they saw her?"
"Maybe-"
"She knew too much."
The interruption shocked the room into silence. Kinkajou's head was up, glaring at everyone around her.
"Carnelian knew too much. That's why she was targeted."
"She- what'd she know?" asked Moon, startled.
"I don't know. But she knew it. She stayed behind to talk to Sunny. When I asked her about it, she said it was just something that might help in the investigation. She knew something, and whatever did this didn't like it."
Winter sighed. "We should go back to our rooms, it's midnight and we have classes tomorrow. Please, I- I-"
Qibli patted him on the back. "Moon, we won't leave until we're sure you're in your dormitory. Kinkajou, we'll walk you down to your common room then go up to ours. They won't attack multiple people, or in the common rooms."
Moon nodded, going up the stairs to her dorm silently, and when she was out of view the other four left.
Technically they weren't supposed to be out- indeed, security was already tight. But a simple extension charm on the necklace made it much more helpful.
Invisibly they crept along, a Lumos alight on Qibli's wand tip, which was showing through the spell- Kinkajou suspected it didn't muffle spell light. Finally they reached the pile of barrels that made the Hufflepuff common room entrance. Tapping out the code, Kinkajou slipped out of the necklace, cast her own Lumos, and snuck inside.
The yellows of the Hufflepuff room still gleamed brightly, as if in defiance. They were the only house yet to have a student attacked. Clay had cracked down on their security, with help from other teachers- dozens of intruder alarms were sprinkled through the common room and the entrance. The Hufflepuffs had easily found them all, however, and figured out how to trick most of them. Kinkajou stepped into the girl's first year dorm and sighed, flopping on her bed. She closed her eyes and the nightmares found her.

Blue. Green. Red. The colors spun wildly. Kinkajou was in a disco dance party- except it wasn't a party, it was a funeral, and she was dead, but she was Carnelian. The broom that was the coffin flew at the disco ball, trying to reach it so she could die, but it couldn't and she stayed there, in pain, flying but she was flying away from an eagle, except it was a snake and a lion. The badger jumped, stretching its claws to grab her-
Kinkajou lurched awake, the other Hufflepuffs stirring as the morning light bled through the windows. The dream was already fading- something about a party and Carnelian? She shrugged it off uneasy, pulling on robes and walking downstairs. Clay was already in the common room- he got there every morning to make sure there was no 'Puff left behind and that they all got to the Great Hall safely. Kinkajou stretched, loosely slinging her tie around her neck when she remembered something- there was a color missing. A color, like a single missing item in a collection, but from a disco ball.

Yellow.

Were Moon being honest, a bear trap seemed a bit much.
Though Hufflepuffs were receiving the greatest security from Clay, the other Heads were being told to step it up a notch.
Jambu didn't quite understand that a notch did not mean 'To the max'.
She sat in an armchair in the common room reading, (Youth: The Dark Backstory to Beedle the Bard's Fountain) and the other Ravenclaws seemed to agree. Tamarin's hands lightly traced down a Braille book, though every once in a while she'd raise her hand and frown at the constant buzzing from a Bat-Ear hex charm.
Two Ravenclaws lounged by the fireplace, feeding the flame and trying to brighten it to aid the readers. The red-orange light flickered off the blue and bronze banners of the common room- in a group, it felt cozy. By yourself, it would feel ominous.
It was the weekend, and at the moment Slytherins and Hufflepuffs were having joint Flying Lessons.
"Hey," Moon whispered, "Can I open the blinds a little?
A boy by the fireplace shrugged, and an overworked sixth year gave a thumbs up. She stood and walked over, lightly pulling the blind a bit to the side, natural daylight streaming in in a small shaft. Here she could see the practice- Kinkajou, Qibli, and Winter racing each other while Bromeliad tried to control Newt's broom. Turtle, a Hufflepuff, was screaming as his broom flew at high speed towards trees and the ground, narrowly missing every time, the broom seemingly having achieved sentience.

Moon sighed and yawned lightly. Normally she'd be talking to Carnelian now, when the other two Houses weren't available.
I should probably do some homework, I suppose.
She hefted up her bag, whispering to Tamarin. "I need a buddy down to the library."
Tamarin nodded and moments later they were off down the hall. Teachers lurked at every turn, being set to patrol and find any hint of danger. Professor Fate screamed and almost hit them with a lamp when they accidentally bumped into her.
At the library, Starflight seemingly hadn't gotten the memo that the protection was for the students as he showed off proudly how if you took a book out of the library without checking it out tentacles would sprout and attempt to boil you alive. After needing several severe healing charms from Tamarin, he was pleased to see how well it had worked.
Moon moved through the shelves, absent-mindedly pondering what it was Carnelian had known. Did she know what was attacking the students? How it was doing it? And to what extent? She sighed, groaning, and picked out a book at random, tossing aside Youth for some nonfiction. She opened Theories on Ghosts and the Soul, and began to read.
Tamarin and Starflight chatting about how few books were in Braille was good background noise as she sunk into the literature, soaking in information on soul fragments gone wild and Simmion the Gruntled.
After a few minutes, the party of four- the three Slytherins and Kinkajou- burst through the door, looking relieved to see her.
"Bromeliad says she's never seen such a bad flying class," whispered Qibli. He seemed pleased at this.
Moon laughed, standing and sweeping Youth back in her bag. She left, Tamarin coming with, chatting happily about flying.
A few hours later, Starflight retired for some sleep.
Theories on Ghosts and the Soul lay forgotten on a table.
And silently, in the dark of night, a page turned.

Carnelian stumbled, gasping. She could feel it, feel it trying and trying. Trying to fight her. Trying to win. Carnelian was not going to let it win.
She fought back, letting out a yell, eyes glowing a brilliant red as she fought against it. You and the others have done enough, she thought fiercely. The fourth- the fourth will not be let free. The fourth will not take them.
Carnelian let out a scream as it exerted its full power, forcing her to her knees. She could feel its rage. It had been cooped up for many years, it and the others. Two had acted before it. It would only take the fourth to make a move for it to begin, and it was eager to begin. Images flashed through Carnelian's mind- a girl with black hair and green eyes walking alone down a stairwell, no one around. The view rapidly zoomed in on her, and the vision ended with a flash of blue illuminating her face. Then there was a boy with white hair and differently colored eyes, stumbling through a dark corridor. Again the view lurched at him with speed, ending in green. Carnelian- she was walking alone through a hall, when it had found her. Then, a forth vision. A girl, with dark skin and blond hair. She was smiling, laughing. Yellow light tinged the vision. Kinkajou.
Kinkajou was next.
Carnelian would not let it win.

Carnelian was running.
She tore down a small, dark, unadorned hall, looking around frantically for anyone. She didn't recognize this place- she wasn't even sure if she was still in Hogwarts. But it was after her, she could feel it.
She took the left at a fork, continuing to run. There. A door- no handle, but a door. She sprinted towards it, glancing back fearfully. There- a red swirling energy, zooming towards her. With a new burst of speed, Carnelian let out a yell, jumping at the door with all her strength.
For one long, frightening moment it didn't budge- then there was a flash of light as her newly red irises illuminated, and the door swung open. She stumbled through it, gasping.
She recognized where she was now- it was the seventh floor corridor. She turned and continued running towards where she knew a staircase down was. I have to find them, I have to escape, I have to warn her.
Suddenly she felt a blistering heat upon her back, and jumped aside- the red energy, which had been about to ram into her back, flew past her. She turned and ran the other way, but it quickly recovered, flying at her again. She jumped and felt the soles of her feet get uncomfortably hot as it passed beneath her. She turned and yet again ran, for a third time. But now something was different- there was a door where there had been none.

Carnelian withdrew a sharp breath. The seventh floor- the Room of Requirement!
She ran inside, slamming the door shut. She could feel it trying to get in, but there were no gaps around the door to slip through. Breathing heavily, Carnelian looked around.
The room wasn't really a room- no, she'd found herself in another long hallway, with a large set of double doors at the end. She flew down it, feet barely touching the red carpeted floor, and thrust through the double doors, finding beyond it a surprise.
The Great Hall lay before her, dead silent as all faces stared at her.
Carnelian paused for a moment, feeling all her muscles relax and the sudden fatigue from fighting it overwhelm her. But she still had something to do.
She pointed at a stunned Kinkajou, sitting at the Hufflepuff table.
"You're next."
And then she fainted.

Smolder wasn't letting them in.
Winter, Qibli, and Kinkajou (Moon and Newt had forgotten about a project that was due in five minutes) sat around the door to the Hospital Wing, waiting. After Carnelian had dramatically barged into the Great Hall and fainted, Tsunami had been the first to reach her, though that can happen when one jumps over a table, knocks several students over, and accidentally sets fire to the Ravenclaw table. She'd been carried into the Hospital Wing, where she'd remained- for a week. Smolder hadn't let anyone but teachers in to visit yet, so now Kinkajou rounded up as many people as she could each day, Winter and Qibli being regular participants, to protest by lounging around. Sometimes Bringer, the Caretaker, mildly protested, but he didn't actually seem to care about what they were doing.
Qibli sighed. "My legs are tired."
"Then come sit down here like a sensible person instead of trying to look cool," answered Winter from his position on the floor.
Qibli grumbled mildly, shifting his back against the wall, and didn't respond.
"How mad d'you reckon Smolder would be if we broke in?" offered Kinkajou.
"Twelve." said Qibli.
"Actually," said Smolder, opening the Wing door, "Mister Smolder's door is unbreakable, just like you wills. Now come in and do whatever you want to Carnelian, I'm on break."

The Hospital Wing felt same as always, except for the bed and the far end on it where Carnelian lay. Her red hair was splayed everywhere, and she still looked pales. Jars of medicines Smolder had her on sat at her bedside table, along with a mountain of sweets gifted to her by the student body.
"Hey," said Kinkajou softly, suddenly looking scared. "Carnelian? It's me. Kinkajou."
There was no response.
"Carnelian? Please wake up. We're trying to figure out what it is that attacked you."
Still, she didn't stir.
Qibli glanced at Kinkajou, who had tears streaming down her face. Then, to his surprise, he spotted a glint of water going down Winter's cheek and frowned.
Winter spotted him and growled. "Just- something in my eye."
The door swung open as Smolder walked back in, and Kinkajou rounded on him. "Why won't she wake up?"
Smolder sighed. "I tried that first thing when we got her- after checking to make sure she wasn't in immediate danger, of course. She's not waking up- I haven't tried some harder-hitting potions, of course, but for now it's best for her to sleep. Maybe in a week she'll be ready to wake up, but at the moment she can't."
Kinkajou, who seemed altogether surprised by this entirely logical explanation and understandably disappointed that she couldn't get mad at Smolder with a clear conscience, made to run out of the wing until Smolder flicked his wand and the door shut.
"Nu-uh. As part of the new security measures around you, you're not to be alone. Ever."
Kinkajou made a frustrated noise.
Winter leaned close to Qibli, whispering something in his ear. "Smolder doesn't want to let Carnelian wake up right? He doesn't want to give her the tougher medicines? Well, what if we..."
"... Accept that that's a professional Healer's orders and realize that he worked very hard for this job and you should never take more or less medicine if a doctor did not tell you to?"
